

Detector Tube Kit for Chemical Warfare Agents

In the event of a chemical warfare attack, a First Responder has to quickly identify what type of agent has been used.

Detector Tubes are one means you can use to assess whether a threatening agent is present.

These tubes are inexpensive, reliable, and very easy to use. Fire departments and HazMat teams have relied on them for years for traditional emergency responses, so they are an obvious choice for use in a possible chemical attack response.

MSA's detector tubes for Chemical Warfare Agents can detect a wide range of nerve, blister, blood, and choking agents. These tubes, and other tubes that MSA can provide, are helpful for First Responder teams during response, rescue, and recovery operations.
